SPOTLIGHT ON SNR FACULTY, STAFF AND STUDENTS

*CAFNR research and academic opportunities were showcased to high school students as part of a summer Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math (STEM) institute hosted by Lincoln University. The institute is part of competitive funding from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) to showcase the impact of climate change on agriculture and ecosystems. Students visited laboratories of CAFNR faculty including Noel Aloysius, assistant professor, natural resources and bioengineering; Jianfeng Zhou, assistant professor, plant science and technology; and, Morgan Davis, assistant professor, soil and environmental sciences. The institute aims to promote STEM education and prepare the future workforce among minority and underrepresented students. [*Excerpted from a story that originally appeared in the July 14, 2022, CAFNR Office of Research Newsletter/Photos from CAFNR Communications.]

The SNR Monthly Reader will be distributed electronically the last working day of the month (except during breaks). Please send announcements (or if you'd like to unsubscribe) to Cindy Greenwood, Editor (greenwoodci@missouri.edu).
